FUND COMMENTARY

European equities declined this month. Expectations for US rate cuts were further pushed out as inflation rates in the US surprised on the upside. In this context, growth stocks tangibly underperformed value stocks.

Adidas was among the top contributors to portfolio performance in April. The company's first quarter was better than expected, with sales up 8% year-over-year, showing strong brand momentum. This was accompanied by solid gross margin improvement, leading the company to increase its full-year guidance. In food retail, Jeronimo Martins delivered solid revenue growth in Q1 with margins no worse than feared. Heineken published better-than-expected results, driven by stronger volumes especially in the Asia Pacific region. In healthcare, Novo Nordisk benefitted from a positive read through, as its competitor Eli Lilly increased full-year guidance based on strong momentum for its diabetes and obesity drugs.

Among the detractors, Adyen's shares dropped sharply following the release of the company's Q1 results. The highlights were very strong volume growth and pressure on the take-rate. Management emphasised this was a matter of customer mix rather than commoditisation. ASML also declined during the month. The company reaffirmed its FY 2024 and 2025 objectives, however the order intake was below consensus expectations. This indicator has often been volatile on a quarterly basis. Straumann shares reacted negatively to the company's Q1 results. While organic growth and margins exceeded expectations, the quality of growth was worse than expected as the important US market disappointed. Full-year objectives were confirmed. Lastly, shares of Sartorius Stedim Biotech pulled back as sales were weak and the quarter-on-quarter order intake development was disappointing, notably for the equipment part of the business and for China. The full-year outlook was also maintained.
