FUND MANAGER'S COMMENTS

European equity markets displayed positive return for the sixth consecutive month in July, underpinned by a very strong reporting season for Q2 and H1 results. Growth stocks continued to outperform but the sector picture was more mixed with Basic Resources, Real Estate, Media and Diversified Financials among the best performers and Oil&Gas, Retail, Auto and Banks among the detractors.

In July, the sub-fund outperformed its benchmark, mainly thanks to the stock selection process. The sector allocation marginally contributed to this positive relative performance (underweight positions in the Energy sector that was affected by profit taking on not-SRI names such as BP and Repsol, respectively down 8% and 10%, both excluded from our investment universe due to their exposure to unconventional fossil fuels production).

The focus of the sub-fund on quality names with structural growth prospects explains the positive monthly return.

Selected names in Technology contributed very favorably to this absolute and relative performance. ASML and Dassault Systemes stood out with double digit gains (respectively up 10% and 14%). The Dutch leader in Semi equipment posted strong results, supported by high demand for increasing capacity in all segments, increased the guidance for 2021 and announced a new share buyback program (9 billion euros over the 2021-23 period vs. 6bn for the previous one over 3 years). The French software group also raised its 2021 objectives both in terms of sales and earnings, still benefiting from its offering in Virtual Twin Experience.

The Healthcare sector also contributed positively with double digit gains for Coloplast and Novo Nordisk and a robust performance for Merck Kgaa, one of the top convictions in portfolio. The strong confidence of investors in Novo's growth prospects in Diabetes (especially with its GLP1 franchise) and its ability to generate revenue in other specialties (in obesity or cardiovascular disease, as illustrated by the recent successful launch of Wegovy or the partnership with Prothena in rare heart disease ATTR amyloidosis) drove its share price to new record high. Carl Zeiss Meditec and Straumann in Medical Equipment also posted double digit gain over the month (respectively +15% and +16%). These companies have in common to be high long-term growth stories with a more conjectural support from the pent-up demand. In that sector, we engage with Philips in order to understand the past and future practices of the group to solve the problem related to quality issue of the first generation Dreamstation sleep and respiratory care products. The name suffered from these concerns over the last quarter, losing around 10 billion market capitalization since the announcement of the products recall.

Among Industrials, Schneider and Legrand rose 6%. Both companies will see a deceleration in sales growth in the second part of the year but the likely recovery of the non-residential market in USA offers additional upside for 2022. Operating margin prospects were scrutinized by investors in an inflationary environment where input costs and components shortage may weigh on the future profitability. The "green" exposure of the sub-fund in that sector negatively affected the performance. Indeed, Siemens Gamesa and Vestas lost ground (down resp. 17% and 6%). The former warned that it will be impacted by raw material prices increase and higher than expected ramp-up cost for its onshore platform.

Some names in the Food / Nutrition segment performed particularly well, such as DSM, Symrise and SIG Combibloc, up 6-8%. The Swiss provider of aseptic carton packaging continues to benefit from the reopening of some countries where the on-the-go consumption is key and offers nice prospects with potential increases in its market share vs. plastic packaging solutions.

Among the negative contributors, companies with limited pricing power suffered from the aforementioned inflationary environment. As such, Unilever warned that its operating margin will be impacted by higher input costs in the second half of the year. Beiersdorf was an underperformer over the month for the same reason.

Financials also weighed on the absolute and relative performances. Without company specific news, BNP Paribas lost 3%. The unexpected decline in long-term interest rates over the last weeks explains the drag. The non-extension beyond September 2021 of the dividend ban and reassuring EU-wide stress-test results announced by the European Central Bank end-July may reinvigorate the banking sector and quality names in the segment such as BNP Paribas, Intesa SanPaolo and Crédit Agricole SA which are the selected names in portfolio.

as --capital additional The apparent calm in European equity markets in the month of February, with a +2.5% positive return for the MSCI Europe, hides a very polarized picture at sector level, with the energy and financial sectors gaining more than 10% and on the opposite side the defensive sectors such as utilities, consumer staples and healthcare down between 3 and 6%. Basic materials and travel and leisure companies stood out as well, supported by reflation and re-opening trades on the back of the early signs of success of vaccinations in the countries that are most advanced in the process. On the opposite side, some of the "green winners" that had strongly outperformed in 2020 and in the first weeks of January corrected strongly, with investors putting the very strong future growth opportunities in second place compared to short term earnings disappointments.

In this context, the sub-fund delivered a performance slightly below that ("that" ou "the one") of its benchmark, characterised by a favourable contribution of our holdings in the financial and consumer discretionary sectors, which were not enough to compensate the lack of exposure to the commodity-driven energy and basic material sectors.

In the financial sector, the sub-fund benefitted of its overweight exposure to banks and insurance players, which strongly outperformed the market buoyed by rising government bonds yields as well as by above expectations' annual results. Selection was particularly positive among insurers, thanks to the portfolio skew toward life vs non-life players (the former being more sensitive to financial markets conditions) as well as thanks to the holdings in Prudential (+22%, which was reinforced after the stock suffered an excessive pullback last month, despite its upcoming transition towards a pure Asian-African life and protection player in 2Q21) and in AXA (+14%, thanks to a very solid outlook for 2021, a de-risked US subsidiary XL's result and to the announcement of the intention to pay a full dividend this year). In the banking space, our strongest conviction, BNP Paribas, rose almost 24% outperforming its peers thanks to the publication of solid 2020 results, the upward revision (vs expected downward revision) to its 2021 guidance (tu me emets un doute, ils avaient une guidance sur 2021?) and the positive message on dividend. As far as the positive contribution of consumer discretionary is concerned, the portfolio particularly benefitted from the holding in EssilorLuxottica, for which the closing of the deal with GrandVision might finally come and for which the clarification of the governance structure with 2021 AGM will finally allow the company to unlock the value creation potential of the merger.

On the opposite side, the portfolio was negatively impacted by its limited exposure to "pure" reflationary sectors such as energy and basic materials. In the energy space, which was up 10%, our sole holding Neste, which is not as much geared to the increase in oil price, suffered the rotation out of "green" names, reinforced by a rebasement of 2021 expectations with the publication of FY results. Among materials names, the rotation was very strong as well: our holdings in the specialty chemicals space (DSM -5%, Symrise -6%) and SIG Combibloc (-7%) declined, not necessarily for company specific issues (as an example, DSM published very strong results with Nutrition up 9% organically and above consensus guidance for 2021 and Symrise was in quiet period), whereas basic materials names delivered very strong performances supported by rising commodity prices (Rio Tinto +13%, BHP +15%, Glencore +20%).

The top and bottom relative performers in February July were as follows:

- Positive: BNP Paribas (+24%), Prudential (+22%), Crédit Agricole (+24%)Dassault Systemes (+14%), Merck Kgaa (+7%), RELX (+11%), DSM (+8%), Straumann (+16%)
- Negative: Siemens Gamesa (-17%), Philips (-7%), BNP Paribas (-3%), Infineon (-5%), Accor (-5%)Beiersdorf (-9%), Neste (-7%), SIG Combibloc (-6%)

Portfolio Activity

The position in Engie was cut. The trajectory towards the "new" Engie in 2025 with significant disposals (9-10bn€) and investments (15-16bn€) offers limited visibility over the value creation over the period. Unilever holding was also slightly cut due to concerns about short term headwinds from rising costs and more subdued market gain share gain.

New lines in Mister Spex and Alcon were initiated. Both names should deliver significant sales and profit growth in the coming years in the buoyant optical market.

priced-inwereannual growthAfter meeting with the company's top management, we initiated a new portfolio line in Accor, convinced that the actions put in place by the company allowed it to structurally lower its break-even, being in the position to benefit of a progressive reduction of travel restrictions throughout the year, with especially leisure travels being likely to rapidly come back in a reopening scenario. We initiated as well a new line in Smurfit Kappa (EU leader in boxes: box demand and pricing power supporting 2021 results, midterm opportunity from switch from plastic to box packaging). Moreover, we reinforced the holdings in Prudential, BNP Paribas, Adidas, and on the opposite we reduced the exposure to Straumann, Roche, ASLM, Nestlé, Burberry and ANIMA.

Outlook

The investment process is focused on stock-picking and is based on a sector-agnostic approach, with investment ideas being the result of a bottom up analysis of the ESG profile of companies, their fundamentals (business model analysis) and the upside vs. their intrinsic value calculated with a cash-flow analysis in a normative situation. In the construction of the portfolio, we aim to outperform the MSCI Europe on at least two out of the following criteria: workforce growth, percentage of women in executive roles, respect for Human Rights and the NEC indicator (to determine the contribution of a company to the ecological transition, with a rating from -100% to +100% depending on the negative or positive impact of its activities on the environment).
