Investment objective

The objective of this Sub-fund is to provide its investors with a long-term appreciation of their capital, principally by means of a focused portfolio of investments in high quality common stocks of small and medium companies of issuers of the United States of America. At least two thirds of the Sub-fund's assets are invested at all times in equities and similar transferable securities issued by companies of medium or small stock market capitalization and having their registered office in the United States or operating predominantly in the United States. The MSCI US Small Cap Growth NR index is used, in the appropriate currency of a given Share Class of the Sub-fund, for comparison only, including for performance comparison. The Sub-fund is actively managed and the Sub-Manager's discretionary powers are not constrained by the index.

Highlights

- During the month, the failure of Silicon Valley Bank precipitated fears over broader contagion in the banking system, causing volatility to spike. In the early part of the month, banks and other sectors such as energy and real estate sold off amidst a flight to safety. By the end of the month, this in part reversed course, with markets assuming more of a “risk-on” posture. All in all, the MSCI USA Small Cap Growth index was down -1.9%
- The Fund outperformed its benchmark
- The underlying health of the businesses in the Fund remains robust, even should we enter a recession

Market Review

There has long been a view that the Fed tends to raise interest rates to a point that inevitably results in something “breaking”. After months of speculation that the Fed’s efforts to combat inflation would push the economy into recession, something finally broke. And that something was Silicon Valley Bank, which in turn precipitated fears over broader contagion in the banking system. While it remains to be seen how everything ultimately plays out, the panic that ensued necessitated the Fed step in immediately with emergency measures to avoid an outcome similar to the Global Financial Crisis in the 2008-2009 timeframe. On the back of this banking crisis, the Fed elected to hike rates 25bps instead of previous expectations around a 50bps hike. Amidst all of this, market volatility spiked. The MSCI USA Small Cap Growth index was down more than -6% in the first half of the month but increasing expectations that the Fed would need to reduce rates before year-end led to a risk-on rally into the end of the month that reversed much of this weakness. From a style perspective, factors such as momentum, profitability, and growth outperformed, while beta, dividend yield, and leverage notably underperformed.

Fund Review

The Fund outperformed the benchmark during the period driven by stock selection. Financials and Industrials were the most notable contributors to relative results, partially offset by weakness in Health Care. At the holding level, the most significant contributors included Goosehead Insurance, The Trade Desk, and Copart. By contrast, Progyny, RH, and Endava represented the most notable detractors. Goosehead Insurance, a personal line P&C insurance brokerage with a primary focus on home and auto, was again a top contributor after having led relative performance the month prior. Zooming out, it’s encouraging to see Goosehead as the top relative contributor year-to-date given the outsized weakness in the stock last year. While the company continues to execute at a very high level amidst a challenging macro backdrop, this year’s outperformance—in our view— is also in part a reflection of how disconnected stock prices and company fundamentals got last year. The Trade Desk, a leading demand-side programmatic advertising platform, was another notable contributor during the month. Despite a tough advertising environment, the company continues to buck the trend on the back of increasing penetration in the nascent connected TV (“CTV”) market, which has been steadily taking share from linear television in recent years. Finally, Copart, a global provider of online vehicle auctions for automotive resellers, continued its momentum into March on the back of a solid earnings report in February. By contrast, our top detractor during the month was RH. RH (formerly “Restoration Hardware”) is a luxury home lifestyle brand and retailer. Over the past year, the stock has come under pressure given broader macro weakness particularly as it relates to a slowdown in the housing market. Stepping back, RH is a proven flywheel company with stellar margins and high returns on capital. Our conviction around the company’s long-term potential to “climb the luxury tower” (ie penetrate adjacent spaces such as hospitality, luxury resort communities, etc.) is still very much intact.

Outlook

Over the past year, the market reaction to changing macro conditions has happened much faster than what we have seen historically. Share prices have pulled back amidst earnings results that generally continue to surprise to the upside. As a result, we believe the opportunity set in our universe is better than it has been in several years. While numerous economic data points are suggesting earnings will inevitably come down, in our view, the more important question to be asking right now is, “What is priced in?” and to stay the course with those companies where the flywheel is intact, and the risk-adjusted returns are compelling. The underlying health of our businesses remains robust, even should we enter a recession. As a reminder, in good times and in bad, one of the key tenets of our Flywheel is investing in businesses with strong balance sheets that can self-fund growth. We believe this allows them to invest and grow during challenging economic and funding environments, positioning them to emerge stronger following them. We have been working hard all year to leverage our distinctive collaborative team approach to look at our investments from all angles and perspectives. We are unafraid to update our views and we’ve made some adjustments to manage the evolving risk landscape as detailed later in this note. We are still pleased with the balance and ballast in our Portfolio as it stands today.
