FUND COMMENTARY

Equity performance in February came with some unusual trends: the MSCI EM Latin America was rather resilient (flattish) over the month despite USD strength, while for the first time in a while, Brazil underperformed the MSCI Emerging Markets index despite a notable rebound from China. Your portfolio outperformed its reference index on strong stock selection in Brazil and in Mexico.

WEG demonstrated once again the strength of its franchise, with strong Q4'23 results after the scepticism generated from its previous earnings release. Revenues accelerated in both domestic and foreign markets, driven by expansion in GTD (Energy Generation, Transmission and Distribution). The company is also increasingly positive about the future contribution of its recent acquisition, Regal.

Terrafina, an industrial Mexican REIT, was one of the top contributors to portfolio performance this month. The company reported encouraging Q4'23 results with strong operating metrics driven by good GLA (Gross Leasable Area) additions, record high occupancy and solid renewals. Terrafina's technical committee also approved the termination of its advisor, which substantially improves its governance structure and should narrow the valuation gap against peers. Additionally, Terrafina received a non-binding offer by Fibra Prologis in February. This was one offer among other proposals.

Portfolio performance was negatively impacted by two of our larger positions, FEMSA and MercadoLibre, both of which have been consistently strong contributors over the past three years. FEMSA in Mexico was weak after its Q4'23 results were marginally shy of estimates. The company's capital distribution plan also disappointed investors, some of whom had built speculative positions ahead of this announcement. We were not particularly disappointed by either piece of news. However, the unexpected resignations of the CCO and CFO came as a surprise. In Brazil, MercadoLibre's Q4'23 results were ahead of both top and bottom-line expectations. However, results were clouded by a one-off contingent liability, a devaluing Argentine peso and margin pressure from growth in the company's 1P business and higher logistics costs (i.e. investing in capacity for future growth).
