FUND COMMENTARY

After a blistering rally in November and December, the MSCI EM Latin America index returned +28.2% in EUR (+32.7% in USD) in 2023. This marks one of the strongest years of performance since the portfolio's inception. Over the twelve-month period under review, Latin American equities were among the top performers within emerging markets, whilst energy, which we typically avoid in adherence to our quality growth investment philosophy, shone as the top-performing sector. Despite this divergence and a rally in banks and real estate, where we have close to no exposure, your portfolio delivered strong absolute performance driven by stock selection in markets such as Argentina and Mexico.

In 2023, Brazil embarked on a new political chapter, re-electing Lula as its President. Furthermore, meaningful discussions surrounding Brazil's fiscal outlook are underway, fostering a positive backdrop for the country's fundamentals. This year's economic data was solid with GDP upgrades throughout the year, mostly boosted by strong agricultural output. The country has also initiated a monetary easing cycle, after effectively managing the inflationary pressures of the past few years.

Mexico, positioned advantageously for nearshoring, has witnessed a surge in its share of US imports and a notable acceleration in foreign direct investments. The country's robust consumer landscape, helped by the continued expansion in remittances, has further contributed to its economic strength. Consequently, Mexico outshone its peers in the region, posting the highest GDP growth rate in 2023.

In Chile, after a prolonged process, the proposed constitutional changes were rejected. Economic activity proved lacklustre, potentially leading to negative real GDP growth by year end. From a monetary policy perspective, Chile initiated a 300bps rate cut over the year.

Argentina took a significant political turn with the victory of the far-right candidate, Javier Milei.

The largest portfolio detractors in 2023 included Arezzo and Lojas Renner. The apparel industry has been particularly hit by the ongoing tax debates in Brazil, concerning the elimination of certain tax benefit deductibles. This ended up being partially enacted in the last days of the year and will lead to downgraded earnings forecasts. However, with regards to Arezzo, we still perceive the company as attractively valued. We are confident that the franchise's quality — in terms of positioning, brand strength, and execution— is unparalleled in its sector while its growth potential in the Brazilian premium footwear and apparel sectors remains compelling. The same cannot be said for Lojas Renner, as we have had increasing doubts around the company's execution, brand positioning, e-commerce offering and management. The position was reduced accordingly during the year.

MercadoLibre and FEMSA, two of the portfolio's largest positions, posted excellent performances and were among the top contributors this year. MercadoLibre repeatedly published impressive quarterly results in 2023, with continuous market share gains in its core e-commerce business and improved profitability driven by the monetisation of services such as ads and logistics. On top of that, the company benefitted in its largest market, Brazil, from both the bankruptcy of Lojas Americanas which had a 10-15% e-commerce market share, and from the financial weakness faced by Magazine Luiza which has a circa 20% share. These outcomes have spurred positive adjustments in consensus estimates for the company. Meanwhile, in February, FEMSA unveiled its long-awaited restructuring strategy, aimed at narrowing the substantial gap to its Net Asset Value (NAV). The key elements included selling its 15% stake in Heineken and returning to shareholders the money not utilised for the organic and M&A growth of its core businesses, namely C-stores (notably OXXO in Mexico and Latin America and Valora in Europe), pharmacies, Coca-Cola FEMSA (KOF) and FEMSA's digital financial ecosystems. While the company has executed faster-than-anticipated on the announced simplification plan, it has also been posting robust and better-than-expected results in its key earnings drivers.

While remaining top positions in the portfolio, we took some profits in FEMSA and MercadoLibre during the year. Falabella, Alpargatas and Salmenes Camanchaca were exited following our disappointment with regards to their franchise quality and/or growth outlook. On the other hand, we introduced new positions in Chile (SMU), Mexico (Grupo Aeroportuario del Pacífico) and Brazil (Dexco). Dexco, a leader in wood panels, sanitaryware and ceramics, re-entered our portfolio after being absent since 2021. SMU, a major Chilean food retailer, has shifted towards growth with a focus on soft discounts, offering high teens EPS growth and a 9% dividend yield. Grupo Aeroportuario del Pacífico (GAP), a Mexican airport operator with promising long-term growth opportunities, was added to the portfolio after a pull-back in its share price due to regulatory concerns and a short-term growth slowdown.

Brazil is expected to experience weaker growth in 2024. This will be driven by a slowdown in agricultural output and the impact of a still tight monetary policy with rates starting the year at 11.25%. On the positive, disinflation trends are continuing and should support the ongoing easing cycle and ongoing fiscal discussions.

In Mexico, 2024's outlook is somehow capped by weak US growth and a still tight monetary policy. Expansionary fiscal policy ahead of the June 2024 presidential elections, as well as structural nearshoring investments should support the domestic economy - which is where our portfolio's Mexican exposure is mostly focused.

Chilean President Boric promised, after the failed constitutional change, to focus on growth-enabling reforms. Presidential elections in November 2025 could rekindle the constitutional debate. Yet, with lower political uncertainty, business confidence should improve while with a weak comparative base, GDP growth seems likely to improve.

Amid a changing and uncertain macroeconomic environment, our primary aim is to identify the most resilient franchises in the region with strong quality attributes and long-term growth prospects. Our commitment to a long-term perspective enables us to exercise patience regarding price and valuation, and to take a contrarian approach when the market becomes overly fixated on short-term fluctuations. We consistently strive to populate our portfolio with firms boasting robust and expanding competitive strengths as well as sustainable growth prospects, and adjust our positions and sizes based on a blend of quality, growth potential and valuation metrics.
