Past performance is no guarantee of future performance.

The value of an investment and the income from it can fall as well as rise as a result of market and currency fluctuations and you may not get back the amount originally invested. Therefore there can be no assurance that the Fund will be able to attain its objective. For further information on risks please refer to the Fund's KIID/KID and/or the Prospectus. Investing in companies in emerging markets involves higher risk than investing in established economies or securities markets. Emerging Markets may have less stable legal and political systems, which could affect the safe-keeping or value of assets. The Fund's investment include shares in small-cap companies and these tend to be traded less frequently and in lower volumes than larger companies making them potentially less liquid and more volatile. The annual management charge is deducted from the capital of the Fund. This will increase the income from the Fund but may constrain or erode potential for capital growth.

Fund manager's commentary

- Fears of a recession sparked an aggressive rotation towards the perceived safety of mega-cap tech stocks
- We continue to believe that equity market leadership is in the process of shifting from the virtual world to the real world
- The three month Nasdaq rally offers investors a chance to reduce exposure to the winners of the last cycle

March was a challenging month for the fund. We underperformed the benchmark and due to US dollar weakness, and the fund fell by over 3% in Sterling and Euro terms. In the context of bank failures on both sides of the Atlantic, rising recessionary fears and an aggressive rotation towards the perceived safety of mega-cap tech stocks, we were modestly overweight the two worst performing sectors, energy and financials, and materially underweight the two best performing sectors, technology and communications. Although several holdings were up by more than 10% in USD terms (including Infineon, Sanofi and Deutsche Boerse), they were outweighed by weakness in three energy stocks (Galp, Shell and Cameco), three banks (First Republic, M&T and Svenska Handelsbanken) and two payments processors (Fidelity National and GPN).

We have sold our two US banks holdings, which were a combined 4.1% of the fund at the end of February. We expect the future earnings power of all medium-sized US banks to be reduced due to tighter regulation and higher funding costs. Our previous valuation work is invalid, and it is no longer appropriate to have capital committed in this area. We crystallised a material loss on our small position in First Republic, which we had started buying in December 2022. In retrospect, our initial thesis focused on its high-quality service-based customer relationships and growth potential. Its exceptional track record on credit quality was insufficiently focused on the vulnerability of the liability side of its balance sheet to contagion effects from problems elsewhere in the sector.

The challenge for investors now is how to position for the long term whilst negotiating the elevated volatility typical of transition periods. We continue to believe that equity market leadership is in the process of shifting from the virtual world to the real world, from the beneficiaries of digitisation to the beneficiaries of infrastructure renewal. We also continue to believe that equity indices and most portfolios are overexposed to the former and underexposed to the latter. But many capital cycle beneficiaries are inherently cyclical and the portfolio's macroeconomic sensitivity needs to be managed carefully on this side of a potential recession. We don't think one is priced in, at least for the majority of quality cyclical which we monitor. For now, cyclical is something to be tolerated, not embraced. It is essential that we allocate our cyclical 'risk budget' to names where we have the highest conviction about long term tailwinds and competitive advantages. In particular, we have continued to reduce our positions in Continental and Galp, due to waning conviction about their growth prospects and current execution.

The silver lining to the rotations in Q1 is that it gives investors two opportunities to rebalance their portfolios in what we believe is the right direction for the long term. First, the Nasdaq rallying 17% in three months offers a chance to continue reducing exposure to the winners of the last cycle. Second, the underperformance of utilities in Q1 has allowed us to rebuild our exposure there, having reduced it last year on valuation grounds. The beauty of regulated utilities is that they offer infrastructure/capital cycle exposure and recession-resilient earnings profiles.
