Market Review

March was a positive month for equities and bonds as Central Banks’ rapid interventions have succeeded to reassure financial market and delayed the risk of recession after the banking sector stress. Interest-rates declined sharply, especially at the front end of the curve, as this stress revealed that central banks, especially in US, may be close to the end of their monetary policy tightening. After having been firstly negatively impacted, credit spreads ended the month almost flat in the US and slightly wider in Europe, with high yield debt more affected. Global equities performed well this month, led by the Nasdaq heavy tech index, which benefited from declining interest rates. Emerging market stocks index performed well, without Chinese stocks contribution. Swiss and Japan stocks ended flat, while British stocks underperformed. In this context, gold was a strong performer. The Dollar lost ground against all major currencies.

Fund Review

The fund posted a positive performance in March, led by bonds and equities. The fixed income allocation was the largest contributor to the performance, fueled by the sharp decline in interest rates across all maturities. Government bonds with short-to-medium term maturities, and the exposure to EUR long term rates via futures, were the main driver of the bond’s performance. The allocation to financial and nonfinancial corporate bonds also brought a positive contribution, even if the widening in credit spreads offset part of the impact of lower rates. While the fund had no direct exposure to Credit Suisse instruments, its diversified exposure to Subordinated bonds was the only (mild) detractor to the performance following the surprising decision to write down Credit Suisse AT1 instruments. The equity allocation was also a positive contributor to the fund’s performance, led by its exposure to US markets and especially to quality growth stocks. EM and Japan allocations brought milder positive contributions, while the exposure to Global value stocks was a small detractor before being closed. The allocation to Gold was a positive contributor to the fund's performance, while Alternative strategies were a detractor. The allocation of the portfolio was adjusted toward a slightly more defensive stance to take into account rising downside risks on the macroeconomic and financial outlook. The equity allocation was tilted away from its most cyclical components (reduction of Eurozone and EM exposure, closure of Global Value stocks exposure) toward more neutral markets (US S&P500, Nikkei with unhedged JPY exposure). The put option on US indices was rolled to a farther expiry. Consequently, the fund’s total net equity exposure was slightly lowered. In the fixed income allocation, a position in 10y German government futures was introduced, complementing the existing portfolio of mostly short-to-medium maturity sovereign and Investment Grade credit bonds. As a result, the portfolio duration was raised by adding exposure to high-quality long-term bonds, expected to bring a positive contribution in an adverse market environment for equities and credit. The allocation to Gold and alternative strategies was not changed.

Outlook

Current macro-economic dynamics remain positive, supported by tight job markets on both sides of the Atlantic fueling solid service sector activity. However, cyclical sectors (manufacturing, real estate, banks...) are under rising pressures from tighter financial conditions, and downside risks for the economy, equity and credit markets are rising. While current positive growth dynamics and still elevated inflation continue to warrant caution regarding long term rate exposure, equity/bond correlations turning negative again enhance the diversification and risk management of multi-asset portfolios. A more balanced allocation between risk and defensive assets is therefore warranted as odds of a market correction are rising, but it is too soon to shift toward an outright defensive allocation. The current mix of slowing-but-positive-growth and less-hawkish-central-banks may continue to support risk asset performances for some time.
