AXA WF Global Income Generation E EUR

Fund Managers's Comment

We have surely passed the peak of pessimism in the eurozone due to slightly more resilient activity data than expected and a moderately faster decline in headline inflation. However, this does not mean that core inflation will decelerate as quickly. In the US, there is increasing evidence pointing to a recession while the Federal Reserve's terminal rate is not far off in our view.

MULTI-ASSETS

In the Eurozone, GDP growth surprised to the upside at +0.1% quarter-on-quarter (qoq), aided by a contribution from foreign trade but also but also helped by another "extraordinary" contribution from Ireland, without which growth would be rather stable or even very slightly in negative territory. Nevertheless, activity is slowly recovering as evidenced by the latest January PMIs which reached 50.7 in the services sector while the Composite Output index moved back into expansion territory at 50.2. On the inflation front, we are starting to see signs of deceleration at 8.5% year-on-year (yoy) in January compared to 9.2% in December 2022 however this move is driven exclusively by falling energy prices. Meanwhile, core inflation remained stable at 5.2%. Slightly more resilient economic activity and robust core inflation prompted the ECB to raise interest rates by +50bps at its last meeting early February whilst signalling its willingness to proceed with another hike of the same magnitude in March before reassessing the need to raise rates further.

In the US, 4th quarter GDP growth also came in slightly above expectations at +2.9% annualised. While inventories once again made a significant positive contribution, household consumption (+2.1%) also boosted activity. It should be noted that the savings rate of American households is extremely low, while credit use has rarely been so high. Residential investment continued to fall (-7.5%) but business investment was also impacted (-1.7%). The latest surveys seem to confirm the challenges facing the US economy as the December ISM indices, both in the manufacturing and services sectors, fell sharply. Retail sales also stumbled in December (-1.1% mom). Headline and core inflation came in at 6.5% and 5.7% yoy in December, down -0.6% and -0.3% respectively. While this bodes well for the future, it should not be overlooked that these remain exceptionally high and that convergence back to the Fed's target may take some time, especially for the latter. Following its last meeting, the Fed acknowledged that downward pressure was beginning to emerge but that this was still insufficient to initiate a pause in its monetary policy tightening. As a result, the Fed raised rates by 25bps and signalled that it could hike further at future meetings.

In the UK, the latest surveys on economic activity remain in contraction territory. Indeed, in January, the flash PMI in services stood at 48 (-1.9pp) while its equivalent in manufacturing increased but remained in sharp contraction at 46.7 (+1.3p). While strikes may have impacted these indices, the underlying dynamics remain poor. Headline inflation eased slightly to 10.5% yoy in December but core inflation remained stable at 6.3%. The Bank of England seems to have focused on the latter point since it decided to raise its key rates by 50 bps but it has already indicated that the weakness of the economy could prompt it to quickly stop raising rates at future meetings.

In China, the rapid reopening of the economy has already materialising in high frequency data such as subway rides, highway tolls etc. but also in the more traditional data such as the Composite PMI Output (production in the manufacturing and services sector) shows a clear rebound (+10.3) reaching 52.9 in January.

In Japan, PMIs remain in expansionary territory while inflation rose to 4% yoy. Nevertheless, the Bank of Japan (BoJ) reiterated its desire to see rising wages before further adjusting monetary policy. This makes the upcoming wage negotiations (Shunto) of great interest as these could influence the BoJ's position over the coming months, especially as a change of Governor is expected in April.

Equity markets enjoyed a strong start to the year cheered by optimism linked to China's reopening and hopes of a less hawkish Federal Reserve going forward. US equities (S&P 500) rose +6.2% while the tech heavy NASDAQ gained +10.5%, posting its best January since 2001.

The EuroStoxx 50 jumped +9.8% higher in the best start of the year ever for eurozone equities as investors reacted positively to easing inflation, declining gas prices and China reopening. Local bourses performed in line with the Spanish IBEX up +9.8%, the French CAC +9.4% higher and the German Dax rose +8.7% higher with even more pronounced gain +12.2% for the Italian MIB. British equities, as measured by the FTSE 100, rose a lesser +4.3%. In Asia, Japanese equities, as indicated by the Topix, also rose +4.4%. Meanwhile, Chinese equities continued to react positively to the opening of the domestic economy with the Hang Seng index in Hong Kong up +10.4% with the local Shanghai index rising a lesser +5.5%. Emerging markets also rose +7.9% in US dollars and +6% in Euros.

Government bond markets also began the new year on a brighter note as falling inflation, higher yields and rising recession risks encouraged investors back into bonds. Sovereign bond yields, which move inversely to prices, fell in the US, UK and Europe as markets expected central banks to consider more dovish monetary policy in the wake of falling inflation. US sovereign 10-year yields decreased -37 bps to 3.51%. In the euro zone, German Bund 10-year yields dropped -29 bps to 2.29% while in the periphery 10 year Italian BTP decreased -55 bps to 4.1% and Spanish BONOS yields fell -37 bps to 3.28%. In a parallel move, the UK, 10-year Gilt yields moved -34 bps lower to 3.33%. Japan bucked the trend, as the market challenged the BoJ's ultra-easy monetary policy sending yields higher and prompting emergency purchases which brought back the 10 year yield just below 0.5% (+7 bps). Credit markets benefited from both lower yields and regained risk appetite that allowed spreads to narrow moderately for Investment Grade and even more so for High Yield.

Within currency markets, the dollar depreciated slightly against most major currencies as indicated by the -1.4% decline of the dollar index. The British pound appreciated +1.9% whilst the Euro gained +1.4% against the dollar. The Japanese Yen was close to stable (+0.6%) versus the dollar.

Commodities were mixed although the Bloomberg Commodity Index excluding Agriculture & Livestock declined -1.9% in US dollars. Oil prices remained in a tug of war between optimism over China reopening and fears that a US recession would weigh on oil demand with Brent flat at just above $85 a barrel while WTI declined $1 to just below $79 a barrel. However, energy prices were once again impacted by the sharp decline in gas prices which dropped -22% in Europe and -34.6% in the US on the back of warmer weather. On the other hand, industrial metal prices continued to move higher on the hopes of stronger Chinese demand with the reopening of the economy and risks of curtailed supplies from Latin America as indicated by the copper price up+10.3%. Gold also rose +5.8% above $1,900 on China reopening, continued dollar weakness and the growing consensus that central banks rate hikes would soon peak.

In January, the asset allocation remained conservative in equity risk relative to the long-term risk structure for the fund. For fixed income, duration was again reduced during the month following on from reduction in December.

In the equity allocation, the conservative positioning was maintained despite a very strong start to the year that saw risk assets, and especially for those outside of the US, rally from the sell-off into year end. Thus, despite the conservative positioning being a negative contributor to overall relative performance, the extra positioning in emerging market equities helped to mitigate this due to their strong performance. The fund took advantage of the strong rally and drop in volatility pricing to increase the risk mitigation potential of the strategy by investing in Put options on Eurostoxx 50 struck for March 2023 expiry.

The fund also increased its exposure to commodity markets during the month as the reopening of the Chinese economy should eventually translate into higher demand for materials, industrial metals, and energy.

In the fixed income allocation, the exposure to High Yield was reduced and the proceeds reallocated to Emerging Bonds. The High Yield was last increased at the start of Q4 when credit spreads were under significant pressure along with other risk markets at the time.

Credit spreads and equities have performed well since and the decision was taken to take some profit and align more closely with the view on risk markets as a whole where valuations are now more challenging.

In terms of currency risk, the long JPYEUR position was increased ahead of the Bank of Japan meeting which, in the end, produced no new initiatives in terms of the relaxing of yield curve controls or monetary policy in general. The expectations are that, prior to the change of Governor in April, some groundwork to changes will be pre-announced which should benefit the currency and see yields move higher.
