FUND COMMENTARY

Global stock markets have continued the rally that commenced at the end of 2023. Since November, investor sentiment has turned more optimistic regarding the likelihood of a "soft landing" (gradual decrease in inflation and interest rates, and the avoidance of a recession). Economic indicators remained resilient, and no significant news emerged to dampen this growing optimism. Despite recent attempts by the government in China to shore-up confidence in markets, the Chinese stock market continued its rout, affected by weak economic data and geopolitical tensions. Against this backdrop, your portfolio outperformed its reference index this month, primarily driven by the strong performance of individual holdings.

ASML and TSMC, both leaders in the semiconductor industry, were among the largest contributors to portfolio performance. Industry players suggest a rebound in the sector following a year marked by inventory adjustments and reduced demand for electronics. TSMC anticipates sales growth of over 20% in 2024. Eli Lilly also performed well, benefitting from the positive results of its competitor Novo Nordisk, which provided a robust outlook for the year. Lastly, Lonza's shares rebounded on the back of reassuring results, a reaffirmed mid-term outlook and the announcement of a new Chairman replacing the controversial Albert Baehny.

HDFC Bank, Sika and AIA were among the major detractors from performance. HDFC, one of the largest private banks in India, reported weaker-than-expected margin and deposit growth. Sika, a global leader in construction materials, announced disappointing sales in the fourth quarter. AIA, a leading insurer in South-East Asia, continued to be impacted by weak Chinese economic data. We believe that the current low valuation already reflects a pessimistic scenario, and we are prepared to maintain our position at this juncture.

In the prevailing market environment, we remain committed to our key priorities outlined at the end of last year: maintaining visibility of earnings growth into 2024 and keeping our valuation discipline.
