Portfolio Positioning and Macro Outlook

During the month the Investment Committee added one new position, RWE (EU Electric), which was funded through the sale of AEP (US Electric).

Stock Highlight

RWE is a German electric utility company that has been involved in generating electric power for more than 125 years. The RWE energy and business mix has changed dramatically in recent years as the company has shut down Nuclear Generation, reduced its thermal coal generation and drastically scaled up its investment in renewables. Between 2012 and 2021 RWE reduced its emissions by over 55%, representing nearly 100mt of avoided CO2 emissions. At the same time it has developed a portfolio of c20GW of renewable generation across onshore wind, offshore wind, solar and hydro assets.

The RWE management team has an ambitious public target of net zero emissions in 2040 which it has backed up with a plan to invest EUR55bn in renewables between 2024 and 2030 as well as bringing forward the shut down of German coal generation to 2030 from 2038. During late 2023 and early 2024, the RWE share price was impacted by market concerns around offshore wind cost pressures as well as concerns over falling power prices in Europe. ATLAS analysis has shown that RWE had less exposure to cost inflation in offshore wind due to a policy of early contracting for supplies. ATLAS analysis also showed that the impact of power prices was largely on short term earnings from legacy thermal assets with limited lives and would not impact the largely contracted revenues from renewables. As a result, the forward returns for RWE were assessed as amongst the highest in the universe and ATLAS took a position in early 2024.
