FUND COMMENTARY

China's Q1'24 GDP growth (5.3%) was better than expected. Despite the sluggish state of the country's property market, industrial production and investment in manufacturing and infrastructure remain solid. During the month, the government rolled out supportive policies for consumption, investment, and capital markets. Sentiment towards equities also improved, with the MSCI China index up 7.7% in EUR (+6.6% in USD) in April.

Among the positive contributors to portfolio performance this month was Tencent which rebounded strongly after announcing a HK$100bn share repurchase plan. The company remains one of the largest weightings in the portfolio as we appreciate its superior quality and stable EPS growth. Shares of Trip.com also rose as travel continues to recover. During the Qingming Festival, both domestic and outbound travel showed strong growth. Fuyao Glass reported strong Q1'24 numbers, with revenue and net profit up 25% and 52% year-on-year respectively, thanks to a hike in average selling price, improved utilisation of its US project and a more favourable cost structure.

Detractors from portfolio performance included Xinyi Solar whose share price pulled back after last month's rally. We see no change in the company's fundamentals and believe that the solar glass recovery cycle should continue. NetEase gave back some of its previous gains after performance of its new game fell behind heightened market expectations. Centre Testing reported weak Q1'24 numbers, with sales up 6.7% and EPS down 8.2% year-on-year. Management however has maintained its positive outlook for 2024, with sales targeted to grow more than 15%.

China is on track to deliver its "around 5%" GDP growth target for 2024. While deflation pressure persists, recently announced stimulus policies in auto and home appliances may support the country's consumption recovery. We believe our portfolio is well positioned to capture growth opportunities in travel, discretionary consumption and industrial innovation.
