FUND COMMENTARY

The same themes that have caused emerging market (EM) weakness for the last two months have persisted in October. The impact of the US Federal Reserve's higher-for-longer interest rates continues to ripple through all markets, both equity and fixed income, and developed markets and EMs. US 10-year yields moved above 5% for the first time since 2007. However, the USD stopped appreciating, while some EM currencies began to appreciate, helped by reductions in interest rate cut expectations and, in some cases like Indonesia, domestic central banks raising interest rates. Finally, economic data from China continued to disappoint. The property sector and consequent impact on confidence continues to be an economic drag, and will remain so, but is most likely fully factored in. The government continues to announce stimuli, for example, the recently announced RMB 1 trillion government bond issuance and fiscal budget easing.

WEG in Brazil had its first quarterly miss since Q1'19. Top line grew 2%, lower than expected due to a weak domestic generation, transmission and distribution (GTD) segment with lower demand for distributed solar generation. Having said this, EBITDA, EBITDA margin and EPS were in line with expectations while ROIC rose 750bps year-on-year to 35%.

Vietnamese retailer Mobile World was weak. Although Q3'23 top line growth was good and indicated a pickup in demand, margins were lower than expected on consumer price sensitivity and ongoing discounting. Vietnamese growth is recovering and with it we expect Mobile World's EPS to improve.

Shorter-term concern over slowing electric vehicle demand, overcapacity and weaker pricing caused further weakness for LG Chem.

On the positive side, several of the larger portfolio positions saw good or better-than-expected results. In China, Inner Mongolia Yili, Mindray, Kweichow Moutai and Midea all produced good quarterly results. NetEase has been seeing Q3'23 expectations revised up on strong grossing numbers with new game launches and was the top contributor to performance in October.

Largest portfolio position FEMSA continues to exceed expectations with Q3'23 revenue up 19% and EBITDA +15%. The company's Coca-Cola bottling subsidiary, KOF, also produced ahead-of-expected results.
