MONTHLY COMMENT – JUNE 2023

Tian Xia: tian@capecapital.com

Resilience reigns

Equity markets

Investors rejoiced at the surprising resilience of the US economy at the closing of June, as the S&P 500 reached a 14-month high and the Nasdaq composite displayed its best first-half performance in 40 years. This month's exuberant market rally was broader than last month's AI-driven "frenzy", as the US economy proved to be more resilient than expected. While the Fed has decided to pause for this month, the economic resiliency would signal that the market could stomach additional hikes going forward.

Chinese equities continued to lag due to a weaker-than-expected recovery. The sluggishness of China's recovery has forced policy makers to cut interest rates for the first time since August and more stimulus measures are expected to prop up ailing sectors such as the property industry. The Euro-zone is also showing signs of weakness amidst an ongoing fight with inflation and a slowing economy, with PMI data revealing moderating activity in the service industry as well as a deepening downturn in manufacturing.

Fund performance

The Cape Equity Fund rose 2.75% in June, and 7.33% year-to-date, while the benchmark (MSCI ACWI Net TR) returned 3.39% in June and 11.45% year-to-date. Over the past months, performance has clearly been disappointing, and as much as one can blame our underexposure in the "Magnificent Seven" (the seven largest companies in both the S&P 500 and MSCI ACWI), there are other factors in play that also contributed to the underperformance:

- We have noted in previous comments how the post-COVID recovery in China has failed to lift off meaningfully. In addition to the monthly economic releases, June offered two additional datapoints – namely traveling demand during the Dragon Boat Festival and the "618" shopping festival – which further confirmed the weak confidence among consumers and businesses. This was clearly felt among our Chinese holdings Anta (-2.3% in June; -23.8% YTD), and AIA Group (+2.7%; -11.2%).

- On two separate occasions, our renewable energy names took a hit this month: 1.) Neste (-0.3%; -18.0%), which held a Capital Markets Day, showed that the market could be oversupplied in the near term, even more so after Sweden cut back on its renewable diesel mandate to address consumer inflation, and 2.) the finalized new biofuel mandate published by the US Environmental Protection Agency fell short of expectations, which negatively impacted Darling's share price (-1.7% in June; -0.2% YTD).
- Finally, certain industries are experiencing a de-stocking cycle, such as the biotech industry where a challenging funding environment has impacted demand for tools and services, or the specialty chemical industry where vitamin demand has been weak since the end of last year. Within our portfolio, Thermo Fisher (0.2%; -7.2%) and DSM Firmenich (-5.2%; -15.4%) were most impacted by these de-stockings.

However, we see these factors not so much as structural issues but as temporary and cyclical concerns that we expect will normalize in the future. As always, we remain confident in delivering robust long-term returns by investing in companies with secular growth drivers paired with solid balance sheets and attractive valuations.

Portfolio activity

During June, the Fund added TSMC to the portfolio. With a market share of more than 50% in outsourced semiconductor manufacturing, TSMC is by far the largest foundry in the world. Over the years, TSMC has built a strong reputation and consistent track record of improving production yields, which is important for its customers such as Apple and Nvidia. It is also one of only two companies that are able to manufacture chips at feature sizes of below 10 nanometers.

The rapid expansion of the smartphone market and its demand for processing chips has been highly advantageous for TSMC. And looking ahead, we see the biggest growth prospects for the company arising from high-performance computing chips, particularly those used in advanced applications like artificial intelligence. The widespread adoption of AI and its various applications – underlined by the commercial success of

Cape Equity Fund

Cape Capital SICAV-UCITS

ChatGPT – has created substantial opportunities. As the exclusive manufacturer of Nvidia's specialized AI chips, TSMC plays a pivotal role and stands to gain significantly from the continued proliferation of AI.
