Sharpe Ratio	-	-	-	-

Volatility is a statistical measure of the dispersion of returns for a portfolio or market index. In most cases, the higher the volatility, the riskier.

Tracking Error is the standard deviation of the difference between the portfolio return and the desired investment benchmark return.

Sharpe Ratio is a ratio used to measure risk-adjusted performance. It is calculated by subtracting the risk-free rate from the rate of return for a portfolio and dividing the result by the standard deviation of the portfolio returns.

Quarterly comment

Emerging market equities (as measured by the MSCI Emerging Markets Index) traded modestly higher in the first quarter, bolstered by value-oriented shares, which continued their outperformance relative to growth-oriented shares. Within the value segment, businesses exposed to reflation generally outperformed those tied more to economic reopening.

Security selection was the primary driver of Emerging Market Growth's underperformance in the first quarter. The market environment led investors to avoid businesses with earnings that lie far in the future, in favor of those with more predictable near-term earnings. The fund's negative exposure to value-oriented factors weighed significantly on relative results. From a geographic perspective, no regions contributed to results, and Latin America was the top detractor. From a sector perspective, health care was the sole contributor, and consumer discretionary detracted the most. The top five absolute contributors to investment results were Sea, Apollo Hospitals, Tencent, Taiwan Semiconductor, and Trip. The top detractors were New Oriental Education, MercadoLibre, PagSeguro Digital, Allegro, and Foshan Haitian Flavoring.

During the quarter the fund purchased Tencent Music and sold BeiGene.
