Quarterly comment

Emerging market equities (as measured by the MSCI Emerging Markets Index, MSCI EM) rose in 2024’s first quarter, and have now traded higher in five of the last six quarters. Taiwan—and specifically, Taiwan Semiconductor, the index’s largest weight—accounted for the bulk of the index’s return in the first quarter. Its fourth-quarter 2024 earnings report demonstrated high continued demand for high-performance chips. India was another bright spot during the quarter, with the country reporting its fastest year-over-year GDP growth in six quarters and significantly exceeding consensus estimates. Conversely, China was the index’s largest country detractor, and the MSCI China Index fell for the fourth consecutive quarter. Mixed economic data suggested that recent stimulus efforts didn’t work, and that the official target of “around 5 percent” growth wouldn’t be attainable through organic economic growth. Brazil was the second-largest country detractor from the MSCI EM. From a sector perspective, information technology and financials contributed most to the index’s rise, while materials and consumer staples were the top detractors. The top individual absolute contributors were Taiwan Semiconductor, Nu Holdings, Lam Research, ASML Holding, and Kaspi. The top individual absolute detractors were HDFC Bank, AIA, Globant, Localiza, and Jubilant Foodworks. In the first quarter we purchased HDFC Life Insurance and Bank Rakyat. We exited ICICI Prudential Life Insurance and Wuxi Biologics.
