FUND MANAGER'S COMMENTS

Market view

European equity markets displayed a positive return for the seventh consecutive month in August, underpinned by a very strong reporting season for Q2 and H1 results (one of the three best quarterly seasons over the last 10 years). Growth stocks continued to outperform, supported by technology, healthcare and the revival of utilities and its "green" component. On the opposite, basic resources, auto and travel & leisure were among the losers, affected by lower leading indicators and the resurgence of Covid cases in China.

In this context, the sub-fund outperformed its benchmark thanks to positive stock-selection (especially in the financial, industrial and materials sectors) as well as to positive allocation (overweight healthcare and information technology, while underweight consumer staples).

The most positive contributor in the month was the financial sector (around +5% total return, 20% of the portfolio). The sub-fund benefitted in particular of the exposure to Prudential and AXA in the insurance segment and by the lack of exposure to HSBC (not eligible as its SPICE note is below 3) in the banking sector. Prudential was supported by the upcoming spinoff of its US activities (Jackson Financial), which will make the UK listed company a unique pure play on the Asian protection and savings market. Moreover, the market was reassured by the evidence of resilient operations in Asia despite the ongoing impact from Covid in the region, as shown with 2Q results. AXA's share price benefitted instead of the release of 2Q results that beat consensus across the board (earnings +11% above consensus), including for the (so far disappointing) US business XL. The performance of XL was particularly welcomed by the market, as it was considered a first proof point that management actions to reduce the volatility and improve the quality of XL's profits are bearing their fruits.

Allocation and selection in the healthcare sector contributed as well favourably to performances (around +5% total return, 19% of the portfolio). Merck KGaA was, again, a standout performer, gaining +17% in the period. The German healthcare conglomerate, exposed to life science, pharmaceutical and materials including semiconductors, was supported by the release of quarterly results +8% above expectations. The company painted a rosy picture for the years to come as well, supported by the bullish outlook for life science and semiconductors demand. The upcoming Capital Market Day in September should give further elements confirming this positive stance.

On the other side, the sub-fund's return was negatively affected by holdings in the consumer discretionary sector. Luxury names, in particular, were impacted by news flow coming out of China, such as the first insights on the "common prosperity" initiative, restrictive measures to contain rising Covid cases and declining stock markets due to increased regulatory burden on certain sectors (such as technology and education). The negative impact on the sub-fund was anyway limited, as over the past months we had decreased the exposure to the sector (Burberry fully sold and LVMH reduced in June) and was mainly due to our position in Richemont (-13%). Even though the uncertainty on regulatory actions in China has clearly increased, we consider that some of the above mentioned impacts are very short lived in nature (e.g. very harsh restrictive measures due to Covid) whereas the political aim to improve social protection and enlarge the middle class is a clear mid-term positive for luxury demand. The consumer discretionary pocket was also negatively affected by the holding in Technogym. The Italian fitness equipment provider was negatively impacted by concerns on the delta variant, as it was the case for other "reopening" names. Still, we consider that the recovery in clubs' demand might be underestimated by consensus, so we believe that the correction is undue. Moreover, even if the home equipment segment might slowdown from the very strong growth registered in 2020 and 1Q 2021, the exposure of Technogym to B2B as well as to B2C is a key positive diversification benefit supporting the resiliency of the company over the cycle.

The top and bottom relative performers in August were as follows:

- Positive : Merck KGaA (+17%), Infineon Technologies (+12%), Prudential (+11%)
- Negative: Richemont (-13%), Technogym (-8%), Ipsen (-6%)

Portfolio Activity

In the month we did not do any large transaction; at the margin, the holdings in Siemens, Merck and Novo Nordisk were slightly reduced, while the positions in AstraZeneca and Bouygues were reinforced.

Outlook

The investment process is focused on stock-picking and is based on a sector-agnostic approach, with investment ideas being the result of a bottom up analysis of the ESG profile of companies, their fundamentals (business model analysis) and the upside vs. their intrinsic value calculated with a cash-flow analysis in a normative situation. In the construction of the portfolio, we aim to outperform the MSCI Europe on at least two out of the following criteria: workforce growth, percentage of women in executive roles, respect for Human Rights and the NEC indicator (to determine the contribution of a company to the ecological transition, with a rating from -100% to +100% depending on the negative or positive impact of its activities on the environment).
